Model description

MPS market update

There was plenty to keep investors occupied in October, with rate rises, politics and third quarter earnings all moving the markets. Most equity indices had a strong bounce in October. The Dow Jones, for example, returned 14.1% in USD - the best monthly return since January 1976 - while the MSCI ACWI ended the month up 2.9%, having experienced a 4.8% drawdown at the start of the month. A marginal softening of language from central banks and reasonable quarterly earnings was enough to spark a rally in equity markets, with roughly 72% of companies that have so far posted their Q3 earnings reporting actual earnings per share above analyst estimates. In the UK, the move away from large scale fiscal expansion to a more conservative Chancellor and Prime Minister was well received with the pound and gilt market rallying strongly on the back of the change in premiership. This month has illustrated to investors that good news generally has a bigger impact on markets than bad news - October saw another US CPI data print above expectations and evidence of slowing growth, but a +8.1% return on the S&P 500 was still posted. We, therefore, remain optimistic as we close out the year.
